REPORT OF SCHOONER WAIGLS, ENGLISH, MANTER.-Left Honolulu Oct 10th, 1873; had a pleasant passage, with light winds, to Rearson's Island, where we arrived Nov 6th; from thence went to Humphrey's and Suwarrow's Islands; the latter is uninhabited, situated in lat 13° 20' S, long 163° 5' W. Remained there 46 days; found very good anchorage inside of the lagoon. The ketch Pearl (formerly the Lunaillo.) Capt Pennal, from Auckland, came into the lagoon Dec 19th; stopped four days repairing sails, during which time her master took the opportunity of examining the lagoon. She left again for Humphrey's and other islands Dec 24th, on a trading voyage. Next heard of her at Rearson's Island, Jan 1st, 1874. Returning we left Suwarrow's Island Jan 5th, and touched at Bumphrey's, Rearson's and Starbuck Islands. Arrived off Honolulu March 6th, and came into port the next day.

If " Q." had looked a little further, he would have found that in the subsequent session of the Legislature, the foregoing provisions were repealed, the payment of the said Exchequer bonds to the amount of $12,300, by which the mortgages were extinguished, assumed by the Government, and the Crown Commissioners relieved from all liabilities to pay said bonds. Thus he would have saved the public and himself loss of time in considering an undebatable matter.

His suggestion, however, to sell the Crown lands to actual settlers, is certainly worthy of serious consideration.

IT MAY BE characterized as unfortunate, that circumstances have apparently led to the necessity that the first official act of the new Ministry should be a revival of the department of war; that the one measure for which the late administration got universal as well as special creditthe abandonment of any attempt to keep up a regular military force-should be the very measure that the new administration, immediately on assuming the reins of power, think proper to reverse. We say it is unfortunate that the necessity should appear to have arisen, for there can be no question but that the move is a generally unpopular one. The reason for this is patent enough, and is found in the experience of the past. Remembering, first, the heavy cost of a military establishment which the country is less able to bear now than at any previous period neither can we forget that which we have thoroughly learned as to the unreliability of native Was detained there two days awaiting the arrival of the steamship Tartar from Sydney. And in fact, serious doubts are entertained by persons of good judgment, who are familiar with the native character, as to whether any other result than that we have indicated can be expected to follow the maintenance of a regular military establishment in a town like Honolulu, where by necessity the soldiers are in daily and hously acatast with the populace. These are in brief some only of the reasons why the Ministerial action in re-establishing the regular > military service has not met with the approval of the general public. So, far, the quasi organ of the Ministry—the Gazette-has not uttered a single word of apology, justification or ordinary comment even upon the rather important measure of the re-establishment of the military as a prominent element in our system of Government. Considering the well-known public sentiment upon the subject, and which has been growing and intensifying for a good many years, it may be justly assumed that some such explanation or justification was to be expected at the hands of the Ministry through their quasi organ. The readiness evinced to talk freely if not perhaps clearly on the "policy of the administration," should certainly warrant the public in expecting some apology or defense of the apparently elaborate military establishment that was foreshadowed in the " Articles of War," etc., which appeared a fortnight since. We are, however, left to form our own conjectures as to the reasons which underlie of the public money that it must necessitate. the theory that we need a regular soldiery, propcrly officered and disciplined, to prevent popular outbreaks in the future, and that the mere fact of the existence of such a force, implying strength in the Government, will effectually operate to Witt, of the American and British war vessels in maintain order in any political excitements that may hereafter arise. Is not the fact that they must suffer to the amount of fourteen cents on every half-eagle, entitled to any consideration? Such a course, like all doc trines of legislation on values, now happily exploded in most places, could result in nothing but increased confusion and public inconvenience and loss. No nation and no class can ask with propriety that their money or any money shall circulate anywhere at more than its intrinsic value. This position is so natural, sensible and clear, that it is difficult to im agine how it can be ignored. Under this principle, it is unmistakeably wrong for us to pass sovereigns at four dollars seventy-five cents; but if we pass them at four dollars eighty-six cents, which change ought to be effected immediately, we will be doing all that any one can ask. As well might the American government be requested to enact that sovereigns should be worth five dollars in America as ours, the trade between America and England being > such a measure as here. It is easy to be confused in measures pertaining to the principles of the various kinds of paper currency, but in regard to a currency of coin, its office as a rigid measure of value, exactly as a yard stick is a measure of length, is to well understood and recognized to be triffed with. Walker, in his "Science of Wealth," speaking of such a currency says: "O all subjects, this is one of the most simple, most free from all complexity and mystery. No one can fail to understand it. Government has not the slightest occasion to interfere with or regulate it. It obeys certain natural laws, which cannot be improved by men. All that Government can usefully do is to certify to the weight and fiteness of the coinage. It has no further concern with money. The main point to be borne in mind in wlation to coinage is, that Government does not determine the value at all, but simply certifies to the weight and purity." The principle is fully established by all the authorities in political economy, and cannot be intelligently questioned nor ever properly come up under any circumstances as a matter even of delate.

exceedingly great and the same reasons existing for

In regard to our need of gold, there is no doubt but that it is a convenience, perhaps a necessity in our foreign trade, but as we have discouraged its presence by our own legislation, the first step to be taken to bring it back to our circulation, is to rectify such pernicious legislation, not to carry it to greater lengths. The fact of exchange being against us for a long time has kept gold from coming here: but this is a temporary circumstance, the present tendency in trade being to make exchange in our favor at an early period. For our internal circulation, we have not the slightest necessity for gold, silver and silver certificates being equal to all possible demands of convenience or necessity.

There is no doubt but that travelers from Australia and New Zealand would be greatly benefitted by the proposed change. Speculators would have a chance for profits, and a few business men here would perhaps find the new arrangement a temporary convenience. But for these trifling advantages, should our Government wound its own prosperity, impair its contracts and those of its citizens, and injure its contracts and those of its citizens, and injure its credit, by the passage of indefensible currency regu-

History repeats itself, and the imagination of the great poet sometimes foreshadowed actual events. When the sack-loving Jack sent his ragged regiment into the hottest of the fight at the battle of Shrewsbury and stood in a secure position, where he could scent the battle afar off, and where Douglass crossed swords with him and Jack fell and feigned death, and Prince Henry after he had vanquished Hotspur and pronounced the eulogy on Jack, that he could have " better spared a better man," it was a dim foreshadowing of a certain person on the evenforth, soliloquized, stabbed and shouldered the dead Percy, resolving to claim all the honor of his death, and Fine Clothing.

At a Fraction on their Cost!

They have two reasons for holding this Sale, viz: they would like to handle MORE MONEY than they have (unfortunately) handled during the late interregnum; secondly, they would not be compelled to hold this Sale if some of their Customers were CASES SHERRY, DUFF GORDON. more prompt in the settlement of their accounts (a hint in time saves nine.)

> HAYSELDEN BROS .. WOULD LIKE TO CLOSE OUT THE BALANCE OF THEIR

they being fully convinced that such Goods will not be in the same demand for the next forty years as they have been during the past three weeks.

VIVE LE ROI.
